			is the first book to be printed in California. It consists of rules and regulations adopted by the territorial legislature of Alta California. This book, one of two known existing copies, was printed by Agustin Vicente Zamorano (c. 1800-1842). He came to California from Mexico in 1825 as the executive secretary to Governor Echeandia. Although Zamorano was to play an important role in California politics, he is best remembered because he introduced printing into this state. His first known text was a nine-line announcement of the arrival of Governor Figueroa in 1833. In the Spring fo 1834 Don Agustin bought an American press and type, publishing in the next two years a number of broadsides and pamphlets in Monterey. From GC 1001 Antonio F. Coronel Collection

A glance at California will show that it has remained a peninsula, though in later editions of Blaeu, it became an island. No Great Lakes are shown, but the East Coast of America is chartered as far north as David Straight. Neg. - prints. "Pictorial Americana, 1492-1822," exhibtion. January 10 - March 12, 1961.	1635
	GPF.1847	Map of America by Hondius 1606	Map - America by Hondius, 1606. Engraved at the beginning of the 17th century, this map has the pictorial qualities of those of the preceding century. Note the various types of transportation - the kayak, the junk, the canoe, and the galleons of Europe. In his insert, Hondius has copied his natives from De Bry's Brazil. Negs. - prints. "Pictorial Americana, 1492-182." exhibtion. January 10 - March 12, 1961.	1606
	GPF.1848	Map of the World by Rumold Mercator 1587	Map - The World by Rumold Mercator 1587, The Mercators. Geradus Mercator, the father of Dutch cartography, was born at Rupelmonde in 1512 and died at Duinsburg in 1594. After studying Gemma Frisius, a noted cosmographer, he started the production of maps on his own account. His world map of 1569 was a milestone in history of cartography and was copied by many	1587

			of his contemporaries, even Ortelius used many of its features in his map of 1587. In 1585, he issued the first part of his "Atlas", a name which originated with Mercator and was later adopted by most geographers. His sons, Arnold and Rumold, and his grandsons, Gerald, John, and Michael, were associated with him. In 1595, after his death, his son, Rumold, published the first complete edition. While Ortelius employed the servies of Hogenberg and others, the Mercators are said to have done their own engraving. Their detailed maps are quite different in character to those of their contemporaries and though lacking a certain pictorial charm, are definitely in a class by themselves. The name, "Mercator", is still associated with the art of map-making, for the celbrated "Mercator's Projection" is often found on maps of today. "Pictorial Americana, 1492-1822," exhibition. January 10 - March 12, 1961.
	GPF.1849	Map of North America by Jansson 1642	Map - North America by Jansson 1642. Jan Jansson (1596-1664) was a contemporary and rival of Blau's. In 1633, he entered the firm of Henry Hondius and aided in the publishing of the second volume of the Mercator-Hondius Atlas of 1633. Later in 1642, he added another volume (the above map is from this issue) and stll later, three more under the title of Novus Atlas. Although Blaeu in 1635 had represented California as a peninsula, now seven years later, Jansson becomes convinced of its insularity. Jansson shows that Rio Grande Nort (Rio Grande) as the most prominent river on the West Coast, but makes it empty into the Gulf of California instead of the Gulf of Mexico. In Canada, only one of the Great Lakes is shown - "Lac des Iroquois". Neg. - prints. "Pictorial Americana, 1492-1822," exhibition. January 10 - March 12, 1961.	1642

	GPF.2030	Map of North America	Map - North America, 1669 - Sanson, N. Shearman Collection. This is an example of the work of Nicolas Sanson (1600-1667), the first great geographer of France and founder of the French School, which for the next 100 years was to be the dominant figure in cartography. His first atlas appeared in 1654. Assisted by his sons, Guillaume and Adrien, many editions followed until he has issued nearly 300 maps. After his death in 1667 his sons continued to publish atlases bearing the name, "Sanson", until about 1680, when the plated came into the possession of Jaillot, who had worked with the younger Sanson. This map issued by his son in 1669 possesses several geographical errors which are found on the Jansson map of 1642 - two of which are insularity of California and the course of the Rio del Norte (Rio Grande). Sanson was the first geographer to show five Great Lakes but leaves two open at the Western end. One of the important maps on display in the new "Maps of the Americas" exhibition is this 1669 representation of North America by Nicolas Sanson, first great geographer of France. California is shown as an island, and two of the	1669

	GPF.2448	Redondo Beach	Los Angeles - Harbors. Redondo Beach, California. 4 mast schooner completing discharge of Norther California lumber at Redondo Beach, California. The identities of both the vessel and the master, mate, and wives is unknown.
	GPF.2449	Discharging lumber, Redondo Beach	Los Angeles - Harbors. Redondo Beach, California. Discharging derrick on Coal Wharf. No. 1. Note the lumber being discharged directly into waiting freight cars. These standing derricks were able to make a quicker job of the discharging than the usual "swinging gaff" of the schooners. Robert Weinstein has negatives.
	GPF.2450	Steam Schooner Fulton at Redondo Beach	Los Angeles - Harbors. Redondo Beach, California. Steam schooner FULTON discharging lumber from Northern Calif. mills. She is discharging with her own gear at the Coal Wharf No. 1. This type of superseded the older schooner which depended completely on her sails for motive power.
	GPF.2451	Timms Point (Fish Harbor), San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbors. San Pedro,California. Timms Point. The site of the S. P. Slip, later the E. K. WOOD Lumber Co. Docks, and best known as the Fish Harbor at San Pedro. This view is looking seaward and Deadman's Island, the connecting breakwater from the Island to Rattlesnake Spit in the rear and the former warehouses of August Timm, the original settler at the Point. Robert Weinstein has negatives.
	GPF.2452	Main Channel, San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbors. San Pedro, California. The main channel where it connects with Boschke Slough. The yards of the San Pedro Lumber Co. can be seen as well as the newly created, and developing Terminal Isl. or as it was frequently known then as East San Pedro. The bridge across the Slough carries the railroad tracks of the Los Angeles and San Pedro Railway lines. Robert Weinstein has negatives.

	GPF.2453	5th Street Landng, San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbors. San Pedro, California. The 5th street landing wtih lumber schooners discharging. Because of the great number of redwood ties discharged here for the expanding Southern Pacific R.R. this landing was known for a time as "The Tie Wharf". Robert Weinstein has negatives.
	GPF.2454	Wilmington	Los Angeles - Harbor. Wilmington, California. This photo taken by Carleton E. Watkins in the early 1870's shows the Banning Co. paddlewheel towboat "LOS ANGELES". The two masted schooners are typical of the early type of lumber schooner built in the Northern California lumber ports of lumber felled on spot, loaded with the same lumber for shipment at ports all the way South to San Diego. Robert Weinstein has negatives.
	GPF.2455	Squatters shacks, San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbor. San Pedro, California. Looking seaward from Terminal Island with the early "squatters" shacks in the foreground. A steam schooner finished discharging, is proceeding to sea over a quiet bar, without the services of a twoboat. The rock jetties, presaging the endless fills attendant the expansion of Terminal Island is clearly seen to the left of the picture. Robert Weinstein has negatives.
	GPF.2456	Lumber schooners, San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbor. San Pedro, California. Typical scene in the early 1900's of the many lumber schooners discharging at both San Pedro and Terminal Island docks. The loaded flat cars are ample testimony to the tremendous volume of lumber pouring thru the port. Robert Weinstein has negatives.	Circa early 1
	GPF.2457	Long Wharf, Santa Monica	Los Angeles - Harbors. Santa Monica, California. A view looking northward showing the mile long LONG WHARF stretching seaward. A fourt mast schooner can be seen discharging, while the bulky structures on the end of the wharf are coal bunkers. Robert Weinstein has negatives.

	GPF.2458	5th Street Landing, San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbor. San Pedro, California. The inner Harbor with the Banning Co. towboat FALCON tied up at the 5th St. landing. Across the channel are the steamers Yale and Harvard. Robert Weinstein has negatives.
	GPF.2459	Deadman's Island, San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbors. San Pedro, California. A very early view of Deadman's Island. Taken by Carleton E. Watkins in the early 1870's it shows Deadman's Island before the jetty connecting it with Rattlesnake Spit was completed. The Banning Co. paddlewheel tug is seen in the center of the photo. Customarily, like all wood-burning tugs she smokes heavily. A wrecked two-masted schooner is seen in the foreground. Robert Weinstein has negatives.
	GPF.2460	Lumber schooner at San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbor. San Pedro, California. An unknown four-masted lumber schooner discharging Northern California lumber at the 5th St. landing. The steamer HERMOSA is moored directly ahead of the discharging schooner. Robert Weinstein has negatives.
	GPF.2462	Lumber schooners at San Pedro	Los Angeles - Harbor. San Pedro, California. In the right foreground is the 4 mast schooner LUDLOW discharging Northern Calif. lumber, at the E.K. WOOD LUMBER Co. dock, S. P. Slip. Ahead of her at the photo's left the 4 mast schooner ROSAMOND is busy similarily discharging. The use of the schooner's gear for discharging, using the well-known "SWINGING GAFF", plus the use of horses to pull the loaded two whell dollys are points of special interest. Robert Weinstein has negatives.

	GPF.5916		Redondo Beach - shipping, ca. 1900. Elevated view - boardwalk & beach lower right, pier right background, nine sailing & steam ships in harbor. On that barkentine at Redondo Beach with her starboard main rigging unrove and triced out of the way, that you spotted - Fred believes that it undoubtly is a cargo operation of some kind, involving discharging. For example he says that a deckload of heavy spars or timbers of great length might be discharged by tricing up the main rigging this way and rolling the spars over the side into the water. The crew, he says, could unreeve the lanyards in the lower shrouds and trice up the rigging, as shown, in about one-half hour. I asked him if they were always unrove and he replie "what you think-hemp is expensive in this country". With the aid of the donkey engine, a rough job of setting up the shrouds again could be done in about 2 to 2-1/2 hours, by a competent crew. When I asked Fred whether this practice was common in his time, he answered "no, you don't do this to amuse yourself, you know" (Above comment comes from an 87-year old retired shipmaster, a Captain Fred Klebingat.
